

SPLENDORA BLOG

June 30, 2006

WHAT TO BAG: REBECCA CICCIO

When we at Splendor come across something that we really love, we just want to shout it from the rooftops...or in this case, from the desktop. We've been on the prowl for a new handbag designer to fall in love with and we finally met our match, local San Franciscan, Rebecca Ciccio. Rebecca designs bags for on-the-go gals who need to lug all of the daily essentials (some even can fit a laptop), but also want to look groovy while doing so. Rebecca is a bundle of design talent and has honed her skills in Italy and has designed for retail giants like J.Crew and Old Navy. The result of all of that training? A paired-down collection of handmade, hand-tooled, wearable, and casually chic bags that will stand the test of time. The leather is butter-soft and the fittings have a brushed glow- none of that glaring grommet shininess. The coolest part about these bags is that we can totally see them in our fashion arsenal for years to come. They have a vintage quality that screams 70's jet-set. Carrying them makes us kinda feel like Anita Pallenberg or Marianne Faithful on tour with the Stones. Even though we're a little obsessed with the Octavia (pictured at left), we really dig Rebecca's entire collection of bags.

Posted by Karen Bard on 06/29/2006 Fashion